BRITISH POLITICS.

The downfall of the conservative ministry and the retirement of the Balfour government marks the end of a remarkable regime in British affairs. Coming into power as a result of division in the liberal party over the Home Rule question, the conservatives have had a long period of rule. With the short interregnum of the Rosebery ministry in 1894-95, the Salisbury-Balfour control in parliament has dominated Great Britain since Gladstone went to defeat on the Home Rule bill in February, 1892.

Since then the empire has faced what was probably the greatest crisis in its history since the great Elizabeth was confronted with the threat of the armada, or since the growing power of Napoleon imperiled the very existence of the island nation. The Boer war, a trivial affair seemingly in its inception, proved in its outgrowth and the complications which attended it, the supreme test of Britain's strength, calling for the utmost exertion and ending only when the whole power of the empire was concentrated on the problem. Apart from this crisis, the conservatives have had little abroad to contend with, unless the Asiatic question may be called a great test of statesmanship. In this realm the apparent inertia of Salisbury, which aroused great apprehension among Englishmen, gave way finally to the diplomacy which led up to the alliance with Japan, an alliance which probably prevented the interference of any third nation in the recent Russian war, and eventuated in the alliance of a few months ago, which is practically a close defensive and offensive league of the two nations, England and Japan.

In Irish affairs, the Balfour government has initiated the land purchase act, borrowing some of the liberal policy and paving the way for the ultimate results Gladstone fought so long and hard to achieve. To be sure, the land purchase has been vitiated to a degree by the refusal of the landlords to co-operate with the government, and by the omission of a compulsory feature; but it has been a distinct gain for Ireland, although it has abated no tithe of the Irish demand for real home rule, of "Hreland for the Irish."

For almost two years, the bye-elections have demonstrated the growing weakness of the conservatives. During the Boer war they were invincible with their derivative cry of "Little Englanders" for critics of the war policy. But since the settlement of the war, and since the exposure of the scandals growing out of army maladministration, public attention has been diverted to home problems, and more particularly to the issue raised by Joseph Chamberlain when he retired from the Balfour cabinet to promulgate and forward his protective tariff programme.

Naturally, in forming the new cabinet, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the new liberal leader, has had to take in the friends of home rule, chief among them John Morley, Mr. Gladstone's old lieutenant and biographer. But the new government is making the tariff-fiscal question its chief issue, relegating Ireland to the background so far as it may. On the other hand, Mr. Balfour has already shown that he and his supporters intend to force home rule as an issue to the fore if it can be done. The final outcome of the situation will depend upon the attitude of the English voters. If they should, by any chance, sustain Mr. Chamberlain's policy, the complexion of English politics would undergo a radical change. Mr. Balfour might be relegated to the rear, and his old secretary for the colonies be brought into power on a coalition of protectionists and unionists.

In a way, the British political situation parallels the breaking down of party lines in the United States. Here, the president and his kind in the Republican party have adopted boldly part of the Democratic programme, such as railroad rate regulation. Another wing of Republicans, chiefly in New England, is loudly demanding tariff reform. The ultra-conservative stand-patners swing wide of both the president and the New Englanders, demanding adherence to things as they are, and threatening to bolt if any attempt is made to change the tariff or legislate on the rate question.

In Great Britain, the liberals have been handicapped by the differences of opinion on the home rule subject, by the dissensions among them on the conduct of the Boer war, and by the growing power of the radical element, which finds its representative in the new cabinet in the person of John Burns, the first genuine labor leader to attain cabinet rank.

Whether the new ministry has cohesive elements strong enough to give it a long lease of life remains to be seen. In one sense, it is a stop-gap government, and the liberals themselves protected against being called into power, believing that Balfour should have given them the opportunity to get a vote by appeal to the country. Tactically, the conservatives gained an advantage by retiring without a dissolution and general election, since they have put the liberals on the defensive, being in power. However, the new cabinet has surprised the opposition by its show of strength and the ability of its membership; and the conservatives may yet be discomfited by an aggressive, successful administration.

THE INTER-MOUNTAIN FAIR.

The announcement in The Sunday Herald of the proposition to hold in Salt Lake City in 1907 a great intermountain fair and exposition has aroused a great deal of interest. As stated in The Herald's story of the event, it is proposed to invite the states of California, Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Colorado and Wyoming to join with Utah in this movement. It is hoped and believed that all of the states named will make liberal appropriations for the fair, for the opportunity to advertise their resources is one they cannot very well afford to overlook.

The Utah legislature is to be asked for an appropriation of $50,000. If any fault can be found with this request it should be based on the theory that the amount asked is not large enough by half. If Utah could afford a $50,000 appropriation for the St. Louis exposition, an appropriation that was increased to $60,000 through the deficit route, $75,000 is not too much for a fair to be held in Salt Lake City. And, in view of the advantages the state will derive from the outlay, the sum last named seems very small indeed.

The Commercial Club's "See America First" propaganda will undoubtedly be bearing rich fruit in the summer of 1907. A great intermountain fair and exposition will be an added incentive to visitors who have been in the habit of going to Europe to come west. An opportunity will be here offered to see the intermountain country, its products and its advantages, in a new and attractive light. And the states that are to be asked to participate will readily see the advantage in generous exhibits here.

It is certain that thousands of visitors who will come to Salt Lake for the fair will be interested in the displays from other states, so interested, indeed, that they will not be satisfied to return to their homes without visiting those states, in order to see for themselves whether or not the alluresments set forth in the exhibits can be verified by actual conditions. Salt Lake will be the hub of a great wheel, the spokes of which will be streams of tourists radiating in all directions and bringing to the intermountain empire an added measure of prosperity.

A fair such as the one proposed cannot be brought into being without an unstinted expenditure of time and money. Hard work, the hardest, most exacting kind of work, will be necessary. Men must be found who will be patriotic enough to neglect their private business for the benefit of their city and their state, men who have executive ability, men who know what a fair should be. That these men will be found we have not the slightest reason for doubt.

Nor do we doubt that the general public will respond generously to the call that will be made for funds. In due season President J. G. McDonald, Director Lester D. Freed and other officers of the Deseret Agricultural & Manufacturing society will make an appeal for subscriptions. Their request should be met with a generous compliance. If the fair is to be a success Salt Lake must raise from $25,000 to $50,000. The fair will be worth many times that amount to the city and the state.

Among the many railroad men who have gone from Salt Lake to promotion and success, none has a wider circle of friends to rejoice in his advance than has "Joe" Young, whose appointment as general manager of the Colorado & Southern system was announced in yesterday's Herald. During his residence here from boyhood he won the esteem of every one who knew him by his fairness, his unfailing courtesy and evident ability; and his career in Colorado has evidently been marked by the same traits. To have no enemies is not always a mark of strength, but if Joe Young ever had an enemy it was because he had offended in doing right. His promotion has been earned by constant hard work, by regard for the men with whom he has had to deal, and by an unwavering loyalty to his friends and his duty.

Andrew Carnegie is not because, in the schedule of expenses incident to the erection of one of his libraries there was an item for attorney's fees. He says he never heard of such a thing before in his life. Andy got out of the steel business, it will be remembered, before the trust was organized.

But if everybody buys Christmas presents early in order to avoid the rush at the last minute will there be any rush at the last minute? Besides, that last minute rush is half the fun of Christmas buying.

DANGER SIGNALS.
No engineer would be hard enough to run the flag which signaled danger. It is different with the average man or woman. They attempt constantly to run by the danger signals of Nature and that of their own bodies. When the appetite becomes irregular or entirely gives out when sleep is troubled and broken when there is constant feeling of dizziness, nervousness and languor, Nature is holding the danger signal. The stomach and its allied organs are failing in their work and the body is losing the nutrition on which its strength depends.

Such a condition calls for a prompt use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, purifies and enriches the blood and builds up the body with sound, solid flesh. "I have had so much benefit from your medicines as to say a few words that you may use for publication," writes Mrs. J. R. Brown, Crystal Lake, Conn. "I had been troubled with a complication of diseases for over two years, but kidneys and liver bothered me most. Some of my worst pains were in my head, from the blood around heart and under right shoulder. My hands and feet were cold nearly all the time, and I had such chilliness between shoulders. Some days I could not sit in bed. I had lost my appetite and could not eat. It seemed I couldn't do any housework. Took medicine from my physician, but received no benefit. Bought a bottle of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and after taking it I felt so much better and determined to give it a fair trial. Appetite soon improved and gradually the disorders disappeared until now I am well."
